National Infant Immunization Week

While infant immunizations are a daily part of routine vaccinations and well-child visits, the fourth week in April is National Infant Immunizaiton Week (NIIW) serves as a reminder, highlighting the importance of protecting children two years and younger from 14 serious childhood diseases, like whooping cough (pertussis) and measles, that are vaccine-preventable diseases.

On-time vaccination is critical to provide protection against potentially life-threatening diseases.

- Now is a great time to schedule well-child appointments and get caught up on routine vaccinations. CDC and the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) recommend that children stay on track with their well-child appointments and routine vaccinations.
- Vaccines are among the most successful and costeffective public health tools available for preventing disease and death. Vaccines help protect both individuals and communities by preventing and reducing the spread of infectious diseases. Among children born during 1994-2018, vaccination will prevent an estimated 419 million illnesses, 26.8 million hospitalizations, and 936,000 deaths over their lifetimes.
- Vaccination is a shared responsibility between families, healthcare, health professionals and public health, working together to protect the community.
- Vaccines are safe. The U.S. has a long-standing vaccine safety system that ensures vaccines are as safe as possible. As new information and science become available, vaccine recommendations are monitored, updated, and improved.
